

Position Available
Department of English

Date of Posting: October 22, 2018

Starting Date and Duration: Winter Term – January 7– April 5, 2019

Title of Position: Contract Lecturer

Applications are requested to teach the following course:

ENGL 2510 WDE – GLOBAL LITERATURES IN ENGLISH*

A study of literature and cultural expression in English from around the world, including Asia, Africa, the Caribbean and the South Pacific, with an emphasis on Indigenous texts. English is a global language, spoken by over a billion people who have creatively reshaped it to tell stories that reflect their diverse social, historical, political and cultural contexts. These stories both respond to colonial histories, and promote cultural continuity. Issues of nationalism, colonialism, globalization, indigeneity, migration and race will be studied through a variety of literary, cultural, and theoretical texts. *This is a Type E – Indigenous content course

Location: ONLINE - WEB

Qualifications Preferred: Ph. D. (English); experience teaching literature at the university level. Candidates lacking the specific degree qualification, but who possess an appropriate combination of experience and other academic qualifications are also encouraged to apply.

Send Applications to: Dr. Anna Guttman
